

The original documents are located in Box 47, folder “1975/06/24 - Senior Staff Meeting” of the James M. Cannon Files at the Gerald R. Ford Presidential Library.

Copyright Notice

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material. Gerald Ford donated to the United States of America his copyrights in all of his unpublished writings in National Archives collections. Works prepared by U.S. Government employees as part of their official duties are in the public domain. The copyrights to materials written by other individuals or organizations are presumed to remain with them. If you think any of the information displayed in the PDF is subject to a valid copyright claim, please contact the Gerald R. Ford Presidential Library.

SENIOR WHITE HOUSE STAFF
Tuesday, June 24, 1975
The Roosevelt Room
8:00 a.m.

JB. ~~was~~

Annex

3 pm Buffet
on 7th Street
by Calva Hills

Estimated adjourn 6:00 pm
for catfish dinner

~~was up 1/2 hour later~~

~~was up about 1/2 hr after delivered to Hill~~

Auto Service - 1 PM, to see

Hignoways - being edited by Paul Trevis was staff around today

V.E. — ~~→~~ Thursday

Henry — Tuesday

Auto Exam

2 to 4 in front
rewritten

Highways

Ben stopped counts BACK to

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 23, 1975

HOUSING VETO MESSAGE

I am today returning, without my approval, H.R. 4485, the proposed Emergency Housing Act of 1975.

After careful examination of this bill and its provisions, it is my considered judgment that H.R. 4485 would damage the housing industry and damage the economy.

This Administration is committed to a prompt recovery of the housing industry and to getting the building trades back to work--which are crucial elements in our overall economic recovery.

I support the existing Federal mortgage assistance program, and I am today directing the release of $2 billion in these funds and requesting Congress to authorize another $7.75 billion in this assistance for housing. I also support a workable plan to prevent mortgage foreclosures for home-owners who are out of work.

But H.R. 4485 is not acceptable for these reasons:

- It could not be implemented immediately, and probably would actually delay some home purchase. Consequently it would delay for months putting the building trades back to work.
- It is in some respects inequitable. In some areas of the country, families with $20,000 of income could qualify for benefits, while in other areas of the country, families with $6,000 of income could not qualify.
- The levels of mortgage subsidies (down to 6% in some cases) would give some buyers an excessive benefit at the taxpayers' expense.
- For the modest benefits that might come in housing, this bill is too expensive--$1 billion in FY 76, and far more in years to come.
- Instead of protecting home-owners who are presently unemployed from having banks foreclose on their mortgages, this bill might actually provoke foreclosures. Moreover, this bill would put the Federal government in the retail business of making loans to home-owners to pay off mortgages--and that is no business for the Federal government to be in.

I believe there is a better way both to stimulate jobs in construction and to protect home-owners who are worried about losing their homes through foreclosure:

1. To put the building trades back to work, I am today directing the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development immediately to make available, under existing law, $2 billion previously authorized for mortgage purchase assistance.

We know this program works, and this action will make new mortgage money available immediately from banks and others who finance housing. But since the mortgages the Federal government purchases are later resold, the cost to the Federal government is relatively low -- $60 million for FY 76, and up to $125 million for FY 77.

2. To continue this effective tandem authority program, I propose that Congress extend this program for another year beyond its expiration date in October, and to extend it to cover conventionally financed multi-family housing, including condominiums. In addition, I request authorization from Congress to put $7.75 billion more into this program if we should need it to keep the building trades at work and to sustain the recovery of the housing industry.

3. To protect home-owners against foreclosure, I will support legislation recently introduced in the Congress that would confer standby authority on the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to co-insure lenders who refrain from foreclosing on home-owners who are temporarily out of work. We want to preserve the good relationship between the home-owner and the bank which holds his mortgage -- and at the same time provide some fiscal protection to the lender who assists a home-owner whose payments may be delinquent until he goes back to work.

While there continue to be many problems in the housing industry, and while there is far too much unemployment among housing construction workers, there are clear signs of recovery in this vital part of the American economy.

During the current calendar year, funds needed for mortgage loans have been flowing into savings institutions at record levels -- $19.7 billion net during the first five months of this year alone, nearly quadruple the level of the same period last year. With this flow of funds, interest rates have fallen substantially from their peaks of last summer.

Meanwhile, the government has been providing unprecedented support to the housing industry. Since last October, the Government National Mortgage Association has committed to purchase nearly $9 billion in conventional, FHA and VA mortgages with interest rates down to 7-3/4 percent. And this March, a tax credit for unsold new homes was enacted into law.

There are now strong indications that new home construction and sales are responding to these actions. New home sales increased 25 percent in April, the largest increase in 12 years. Home building permits climbed 24 percent in April and an additional 9 percent in May. Also in May, housing starts -- which represent not only new homes but new jobs -- rose sharply.

These favorable trends, however, do not mean that we have overcome our problem in housing. To the contrary, the level of home construction is still too low, and I fully agree with those who believe that a swift recovery in housing is a prime objective of national economic policy.

We must accelerate the improvement in housing that now appears to be coming about.

My action today to commit $2 billion for mortgage purchase assistance under the Emergency Home Purchase Assistance Act of 1974 will exhaust the current authorization under that Act. In proposing that this Act be extended, broadened to multi-family housing, and expanded by $7.75 billion, I am affirming that we have a tried and tested mechanism for supplementing and reinforcing housing construction.

Unfortunately, while H.R. 4485 does contain the multi-family amendment I have recommended, it fails to extend the current law, increase its authorization or effect any other improvements. Worse, it would authorize a variety of new and untried subsidies, including provisions for mortgages with mandated 6 and 7 percent interest rates and $1,000 down-payment grants. Since there appears to have been no consensus in favor of any one of these new subsidies, the bill adopts all of them in the hope that something will work.

The full implementation of these new subsidies, together with other provisions of the bill, would add approximately $1 billion to the fiscal 1976 deficit and ultimately cost approximately $2 billion. An addition to the budget of this magnitude to benefit a few home-buyers is inequitable as well as costly.

It is most important to housing that we maintain a firm line against ill-considered spending that adds to the growing deficit and necessitates Federal government borrowing which tends to drive up interest rates and depress housing construction. I believe that budgetary restraint is a key element in our effort to instill the kind of consumer confidence in the future that is essential to a vigorous housing market.

Proponents of H.R. 4485 have argued that the budgetary costs of this bill would be outweighed by stimulating an upturn in housing starts, jobs and tax revenues. But critical defects in the bill concerning its relative cost, impact, timing and long-term implications will prevent it from achieving these objectives.

First, the levels of subsidy provided are excessively deep and costly. Under H.R. 4485, mortgages would be heavily subsidized so that they could bear lower interest rates than any previously available to other home-owners during the last ten years. These deep subsidies would require substantial Federal outlays. Moreover, experience demonstrates that a strong and healthy housing industry can be maintained without the deep subsidies contained in this bill.

Second, the bill would not work as intended even if it could be immediately implemented. Although supporters of H.R. 4485 have claimed that it would produce hundreds of thousands of additional housing units, evaluation by HUD and OMB does not suggest that the bill would have any impact of this magnitude or that the units produced would necessarily be additional to those that would be produced in the absence of such large subsidies. Those most likely to be influenced to buy under the bill would be families near the top of the eligibility range. These same families would be most apt to buy even without subsidy assistance on the scale proposed.

Third, because the bill could not be immediately implemented, it would actually impede an early recovery in housing starts. The subsidies which would be authorized include new approaches that have never been tried before. To make this assistance available, it would not only be necessary to secure appropriations and write regulations, but also to prepare a variety of new forms, establish procedures and familiarize government, lender and builder personnel throughout the country with them. Even given top priority, months could be required before implementation is completed. Thus, H.R. 4485 -- far from helping during the coming months -- would actually inhibit home purchases among those eligible for assistance, since these families would understandably want to wait until the subsidies become available.

Fourth, the bill has long-term impacts and implications that are inappropriate and undesirable for an "emergency" measure. One of the subsidy options included in the bill would require home-owners with 6 percent interest rate mortgages to make increasing monthly payments in the future, up to the full payments that would be required at current market interest rates. I believe there will almost certainly be intense pressures for relief against these phase-up provisions in years to come -- and thus for a continuation of the deep subsidies this option involves. Moreover, even if this approach works as intended, it would require substantial government outlays in future years when the economy may be operating at full capacity with inflationary forces at or approaching their peaks.

Fifth, the subsidy provisions of H.R. 4485 pose substantial problems of equity among those who would and would not be eligible for the relatively large subsidies provided. As the bill is written, substantial subsidies would be made available to families within a given income group. Other families with similar or even less income would receive no subsidy at all and would be expected to pay full market rate mortgages. These discrepancies would be very sharp and hard to justify. In some areas, it would permit families with incomes well over $20,000 to qualify while, in other areas, families with incomes as low as $6,000 would be ineligible.

Sixth, H.R. 4485 would make a number of undesirable changes in our housing and community development laws. For example, the bill would extend the homeownership program authorized under Section 235 of the National Housing Act. It would also extend and expand the program of subsidized government rehabilitation loans authorized under Section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964. These provisions would reverse decisions the Congress itself enacted last year after one of the most extensive reviews of Federal housing policy ever conducted. Also objectionable are the provisions which would divert funds from the new leased housing program, and establish special rules for certain State agency housing projects assisted under Section 236 of the National Housing Act.

Finally, the foreclosure provision of H.R. would almost certainly cause more foreclosures than it prevented. This provision reflects the concern that mortgage foreclosures may soar during the recession. To date, no such trend has developed because private lenders have been cooperating with home-owners through forbearance and common sense arrangements. In fact, foreclosures rates have remained stable -- actually, at a level lower than that experienced during the mid-1960s.

Nonetheless, I can appreciate the desire of Congress to enact legislation, and I will support legislation which would confer standby authority on the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to co-insure lenders who withhold foreclosures.

Good housing is one of our greatest national assets, and our objective was and is to assist in the recovery of the housing construction industry and to help get the building trades workers back to their productive and meaningful skills. I shall be glad to work with the Congress toward this objective.

#