Austin — U.S. Sen. John Tower has challenged former California Gov. Ronald Reagan to a public debate, saying he cannot let go unchallenged Reagan's charges that President Ford is "soft on national defense."

"As second ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, I believe I am qualified to set the record straight," Tower said Friday.

Ford questions Reagan's judgment on defense

By STEVEN KNOWLES

Using national defense as an example, President Gerald Ford questioned fellow Republican Ronald Reagan's ability to "level with the American people."

In TJC's first Presidential visit, the chief executive told a crowd of 3,500 inside and 5,000 outside Wagstaff Gymnasium that Reagan's arguments on defense are "superficial" and "based on incomplete knowledge."

As part of Ford's fast-paced Texas campaign before the Republican primary, the TJC speech was termed "more important than we expected" by network camera crews chiefs.

The keynote was military and the attack was on opponent Reagan's judgment in national issues.

A thunderous welcome greeted the President when he appeared on the gymnasium balcony with six beaming Apache Belles as the Band played "Hail to the Chief."

As one Houston television correspondent told his audience, President Ford's speech was a shift in his campaign from the "growing strength and prosperity of the American economy to a new and more complex issue: the strength of America's military forces."

Ford accused Presidential challenger Reagan of shifting his attack on his administration's policies because of a wild swinging second place position. He concentrated on Reagan's alleged inability to judge military problems, and said the Presidency allows "no retakes" referring to Reagan's Hollywood career.

Ford's campaign until his Tyler speech concentrated on the easing of recession and inflation and emphasis on the tenet that Reagan "had nothing to do with it," as he told reporters at Gregg County Airport the night before.

"Our military capabilities today are equal to any challenge. Let there be no doubt about it," Ford said. "Our military forces are capable of fulfilling their assigned missions, period."

Claiming Reagan's defense policies imply reshaping U.S. military forces to mirror those of the Soviet Union, Ford listed several reductions in areas of American armed forces he said such a policy indicated.

"Now, obviously my opponent isn't foolish enough to seriously suggest that we should do away with our carriers, our B-25s or our Marine Corps," the President said. "The significant point to be made, however, is that simplistic and superficial charges based on limited information and experience could lead to irresponsible and fundamentally harmful policy decisions."

President Ford continued, "Obviously, we should exercise a great caution before heeding the words of a man who obviously has no experience and little understanding of the complexity of national defense matters."

Ford said no reputable military expert he knew had suggested such a course of action, one which "would undermine rather than strengthen our defenses."

Ford, president of 21 months, promised to reverse the trend of successive military cutbacks by Congress with his projected 1977 budget.

The President emphasized America's strength as being second to none and said "It is irresponsible and a disservice to the American people to lead them to believe that we are inferior when we are not, that our military strength is insufficient when it is not."

President Ford answered several questions from the floor after his speech then climbed back to the upper level where he was kissed by most of the Apache Belles.
