Fooling With Busing

To the editors:

John Mathews ("Fooling with Busing," TNR, October 11) writes, "many . . . Northern and Western school systems . . . are now as rigidly segregated as the South was before Brown. . . ." This is simply and completely wrong. No Northern or Western school system is today totally segregated, as were all the Southern systems at the time of Brown. In every one blacks attend schools with whites, whites attend school with blacks. We have gress "defied" the Court when it passed the amendment permitting the income tax? It was rather taking steps under the Constitution to amend the Constitution. This is not defiance; this is its Constitutional role, as it is the Court's role to say what the unamended Constitution means.

I believe liberal opinion on the busing issue in the North is confused in part because of such incorrect and loose formulations of the issue.
