Welcome

We are deeply grateful that you could join with us this evening to help us express our appreciation to the Congress of the United States for designating this historic house as the residence of the Vice Presidents of our country.

Nelson A. Rockefeller Nancy A. Rockefeller

The Vice-Presidential Residence

The official residence of the Vice President of the United States is a large, gracious house situated in a wooded area on the grounds of the U.S. Naval Observatory. Built before the turn of the century, it has witnessed a great deal of history, especially naval history, for it was initially designed as a residence for the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, and subsequently, in 1928, became the official home for the Chiefs of Naval Operations. In the latter role, it served for almost a half century until, in 1974, it was designated by Congress for use by the Vice President—the first time in United States history that a home has been provided by the Federal government for the Vice President.

Among the distinguished Chiefs of Naval Operations who have occupied it in the past have been Fleet Admiral William D. Leahy, Admiral Harold R. Stark, Fleet Admiral Ernest J. King, and Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, all of whom played vital roles in the Naval history of World War II. Admiral Elmo F. Zumwalt Jr. was its last CNO occupant. The new official residence provided for the Chiefs of Naval Operations is a beautiful house across from the State Department overlooking Kennedy Center.

Benjamin Harrison and Grover Cleveland were Presidents of the United States when the Observatory was under construction, in 1891 to 1893. It was a period when Eastlake and Neo-Jacobean architecture was giving way to Romanesque Revival, both styles coming within the definition of Victorian potpourri. The house, designed by Washington architect Leon E. Dessez, reflects the period. Its first two floors are of brick and frame, while its steep slate roof accommodates another story from which three dormers protrude, two capped with triangular roofs and one with a conical roof. On the main floor, a broad veranda curves around a Romanesque tower, complete with high conical roof, weathervane and flag. A pillared porte-cochere in front, and a carriage house at the rear are nostalgic reminders of the days when life was more leisurely and guests arrived behind teams of spanking greys. Today the carriage house is used by the Secret Service, and a two car garage is attached to the house at the rear. A greenhouse supplies fresh flowers to the house, and plants for the wooded grounds, which are landscaped like an English park.

Built primarily for family living rather than official functions, the rooms in the rambling old house are comfortably proportioned, and the Vice President and Mrs. Rockefeller, the first to occupy it in its new role, have furnished them for family use and enjoyment.

On the ground floor is a reception hall, a living room, sitting room and dining room. The second floor contains two bedrooms, an office and den, and the third floor has four more bedrooms, three of which utilize the dormers and are small. There are three bathrooms and three lavatories on the family floors. After the fashion of the period, the kitchen is in the basement, with a dumb waiter and a serving pantry adjacent to the dining room.

The Rockefellers have used muted shades of beige, offwhite, tan and green for the rugs and walls, to accommodate an eclectic assortment of furnishings.

The first floor contains a mix of various styles. A mahogany dining table which will accommodate a maximum of sixteen, and several fine Oriental pieces including chairs, chests and a table are among the Vice President's personal contributions to the decor. Mrs. Rockefeller has used colonial pieces of her own, primarily old Chippendale pieces from her family and some Sheraton reproductions in the upstairs rooms to create an atmosphere of relaxation and comfort. An exception to this general theme of traditional informality is a bed by Max Ernst in the master bedroom. A combination of wood and brass in shades of green, brown and black, with a large triangular headboard and carved leaf footboard, it reflects Mr. Rockefeller's lifelong interest in innovative design. The Rockefellers' sons, Nelson and Mark, selected the third floor tower bedroom as their own and chose the furnishings, which include plain single beds, a large table, and beanbag chairs. Works of American art from the pilgrims to the present are hung on the walls throughout the house.

The land on which the house stands was acquired by the Federal government in 1881 for a Naval Observatory site. Up to that time, the Observatory had stood in Foggy Bottom between 23rd and 24th Streets near E Street, NW, but the Federal city had closed in on that area to such an extent that precise observations and measurements were becoming increasingly difficult. In 1880 President Rutherford B. Hayes named a commission to select a new site, one which would be "free of obstructions on the horizon and from objectionable vibrations from traffic." The next year the commission recommended acquisition of "Pretty Prospect," a 72-acre estate in "Georgetown Heights," owned by Mrs. M. C. Barber and situated between Massachusetts and Wisconsin Avenues at 34th Street NW.

Said the commission, with commendable concern but dubious prescience: The site "is remote from any public road, being approachable only by a carriage path, so that it enjoys the inestimable advantages of seclusion, quiet and freedom from disturbance either by visitors or by passing vehicles... (it) is protected from encroachment by deep ravines in the vicinity which are likely long and perhaps forever to prevent its being hemmed in by buildings, whatever may be the growth of the city."

Ten years later, funds were provided by Congress for construction of a new Naval Observatory, to be built in the exact center of the 72-acre circular enclave, for maximum protection against traffic vibrations, and an additional appropriation of $20,000 was made for a Superintendent's home, to be built in the northeast quadrant of the circle.

Both the Observatory and the residence were commissioned in 1893, and a total of sixteen superintendents and a like number of Chiefs of Naval Operations occupied the house before Congress, on January 21, 1974, designated it as the official residence of the Vice President. An appropriation of $315,000 was approved for necessary repairs and renovations and some furnishings.

Gerald R. Ford was Vice President at the time, but history moved faster than the renovations; before they were completed, the Fords became residents of the White House. Mrs. Ford, however, selected china, crystal, linens, flatware and kitchenware for the house and these are being utilized by the Rockefellers.

No one is likely to stand in awed contemplation before the post-Victorian Vice Presidential residence. It relaxes rather than intrigues the eye; it is a dowager rather than a debutante among houses. But the Rockefellers have found in it amplitude, coherence, dignity, the patina of history and long tradition and an ambience for comfortable living. Mrs. Rockefeller, who has taken a deep personal interest in its refurbishing and refurnishing, says, "We expect to be very happy here."

HOUSEWARMING PARTY FOR THE VICE PRESIDENT'S HOUSE
Sunday, September 7, 1975
6:00 p.m. - 9:00 p.m.
The Naval Observatory
3400 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.

From: The Vice President

I. PURPOSE

To attend the first of a series of nine "Housewarmings" given by the Vice President to thank the Congress and, through them, their constituents throughout the country for making an official residence available to Vice Presidents.

II. BACKGROUND, PARTICIPANTS AND PRESS ARRANGEMENTS

A. Background

1. Because the size of the house necessarily limits the number of guests, a series of nine parties are being held to which members of both houses of Congress are being invited (divided evenly and invited alphabetically) along with the Supreme Court, representative citizens from each state, and senior Administration officials.
2. A copy of the invitation is attached at TAB A.

B. Participants

1. There will be between 225 and 250 guests at each reception.
2. A list of guests for Reception 1, Sunday, September 7, is attached at TAB B.

C. Press Arrangements

1. There will be a Press Preview in the afternoon of

2.

Sunday, September 7, for television film crews to film the House.

2. At the receptions, there will be limited press coverage including all media (television, still photographers, and writing press).

III. TALKING POINTS - None
