NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION

NA FORM 1429 (1-98)
Madame Valéry Giscard d'Estaing
Anne-Aymone Giscard d'Estaing was born in Paris on April 10, 1933 to Aymone de Faucigny-Lucinge and François de Brantes, an officer in the French Army.

She has four brothers and sisters. Two are older:
- Rosaméé, married to Parisian industrialist MarcHenrion, with four children;
- Paul, a farmer in the Loir-et-Cher Department, married to an American, two children.

And two are younger:
- Marguerite, a princess in a Benedictine monastery in Senegal;
- Guy, a banker in New York; his wife is from the Netherlands; three children.

From 1927 to 1939 her family lived in London where Captain de Brantes was assistant military attaché at the French Embassy. During the war from 1939 to 1940, Madame de Brantes lived with her children in Authon (Loir-et-Cher) with her father-in-law, General de Brantes. From 1941 to 1942 François de Brantes, now a Major, was military attaché at the French Embassy in Lisbon where his family joined him once again. On his return to France he played an active role in the Army Resistance Organization; he was deported to Mauthausen, where he died in May 1944. The rank of Lieutenant Colonel, which he had held in the Resistance organization, was officially conferred on him posthumously.

Until the end of World War II the two oldest children spent most of their time in boarding schools in Paris, but the younger children, including Anne-Aymone, took correspondence courses under the supervision of a tutor.

After Major de Brantes' death, General de Brantes helped his daughter-in-law rear her children, on whom he had considerable influence and in whom he instilled a sense of military tradition. During the 1914-1918 war he had fought in the cavalry but at his own request was transferred to the infantry and took part in the Battle of Verdun. He subsequently commanded the French forces occupying Upper Silesia from 1920 to 1922. He ended his career with the rank of Major General and was military governor of Lunéville before retiring to Authon, where he died in 1950.

From 1945 to 1951 Anne-Aymone de Brantes pursued her secondary studies in Paris at Notre-Dame-des-Oiseaux except for a year that she spent in Cambridge from 1949 to 1950. There she acquired an excellent command of English. She also speaks Spanish and Portuguese.

In 1951-1952 she took courses in bilingual secretarial skills and studied art history at the Ecole du Louvre.

During this time Madame de Brantes, who is very active in the Association for Aid to War Widows and War Orphans, made many trips with her children to Greece, Italy, Spain, England, Switzerland and Austria.

In December 1952 Anne-Aymone married Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, who was then working at the Financial Inspectorate. She had met him several months before at the home of her godmother, Madame Alfred Fabre-Luce.

The couple has four children:
- Valérie-Anne (November 1, 1953)
- Henri (October 17, 1956)
- Louis (October 22, 1958)
- Jacinte (February 3, 1960)

The young couple first spent a few months in Morocco (where Valéry was sent to make various audits before joining the private staff of Edgar Fauré [1953], who was successively Minister of Finance and then President of the Council). On returning to France, the couple set up housekeeping in Neuilly and then moved to the Rue Bénouville in November 1956 after Valéry was elected Deputy to the National Assembly.

Since then the family has spent most weekends at the de Brantes family estate in Touraine. Vacations have generally been spent in Avignon and Chamonix at the home of the Edmond Giscard d'Estaing, and their visits became more frequent when Valéry Giscard d'Estaing succeeded his grandfather Jacques Bardoux as Deputy from the Puy-de-Dôme Department. The family also regularly takes a winter vacation in February at the chalet of the Edmond Giscard d'Estaing at Courchevel, where children and parents alike enjoy skiing.

When her husband became Secretary of State in 1959 and then Minister of Finance in 1962, Madame Valéry Giscard d'Estaing accompanied him on several visits to Asia (Japan, China, Cambodia), to the Soviet Union, Africa (Kenya, Mozambique, Gabon, Senegal), North Africa (Algeria, Morocco) and Brazil.

While devoting a good deal of time to various charitable organizations, she began to familiarize herself with economic problems and in 1969 helped found the first women's investment club in Paris of which she is still an active member.

In 1974 she took part in the presidential campaign, working every day with the staff at the campaign headquarters on the Rue de la Bienfaisance. She accompanied her husband on speaking engagements, to Rouen among other cities, and to large meetings in the Paris region. She also visited the Overseas Departments in the Antilles without him.

Madame Valéry Giscard d'Estaing has always had a preference for country life. She enjoys gardening and is very interested in farming and owns property at Authon where she spent part of her childhood.

She is also fond of animals and owns an aging cocker spaniel by the name of Bambou.

An enthusiastic sportswoman, she used to enjoy horseback riding and swimming in her youth but these days has a preference for skiing. She also likes to take the wheel of a car, regardless of the model.

What little free time she has she devotes to needlepoint and reading. Her taste in books runs to memoirs and histories.

Believing very strongly in family life, she has paid careful attention to the upbringing of her children.

Valérie-Anne, the oldest child, is independently minded and a good student. She is a graduate of the Institut d'Études Politiques in Paris and was a great help to her father in his bid for the presidency. She is currently a technical adviser on the staff of the Secretary of State for Culture. A music lover, she enjoys playing the piano. She is also a good horsewoman and goes in for competition riding. She likes to travel and has been to the United States several times, in addition to various countries in Europe (Italy, Germany, Britain, Portugal) and Africa.

Henri is a freshman student at the Institut d'Études Politiques in Paris and would eventually like to attend the École Nationale d'Administration. He has an avid interest in politics and for several months he has been with the steering committee of the young Independent Republicans, the "Génération sociale et libérale." He also like music and is interested in horse racing.
Louis is a high-school senior at the Collège Saint-Jean de Passy. He shows an interest in economics and an appreciation of painting, plays tennis and is well informed about horse racing. He too follows political life closely.

Jacinte is a junior at the Institution Sainte-Marie de Neuilly where she is a talented student. She loves drawing, is a riding enthusiast and takes part in horse shows whenever she can.

Since Valéry Giscard d'Estaing has been President of the Republic, the children's habits and the family's life style have hardly changed.

Because there is not enough room in the private apartments of the Elysée Palace, the family continues to live at the Rue Bénouville.

For those interested in genealogy, Madame Valéry Giscard d'Estaing is descended on her mother's side from the Duc de Berry whose daughter, the great-grandmother of Madame de Brantes, married a Faucigny-Lucinge.

Madame Valéry Giscard d'Estaing is reserved, poised and sensitive. She is energetic in pursuing the objectives she sets herself and possesses a quick sense of humor.

Composed in 1905
First performance in Lyon, March 10, 1906

Three movements:
1. Moderato
2. Mouvement de B egret
3. Animato

Dedicated to Ida and Cipa Godabeki

The Weekly Critical Review, an Anglo-French magazine founded by Arthur Lias which was devoted to literature, fine arts and music announced an international competition for the best first movement of a piano sonata. It was stipulated that the length should not exceed seventy-five bars and the first prize would be 100 francs (150.00).

Ravel was the only composer to send in a composition, but because of the possible bankruptcy of the magazine, Arthur Lias called off the competition and sent back Ravel's manuscript which, incidentally, was two bars longer than the stipulated length.

 Choreography by George Balanchine
CONCERTO IN G

for piano and orchestra in three movements:

"Allegretto, Adagio sostenuto, Presto"

Composed in 1931

First performance: Concerts Languaix, salle Pleyel, Paris
January 14, 1933
Marguerite Long, soloist
Conducted by Maurice Ravel

Dedicated to Marguerite Long

By 1930, Ravel had reached the heights of popularity. His works were being played abroad and offers of concert tours through almost all the countries of Europe were piling up on his desk. For these concerts, he wanted to write a concerto which he could play himself. "...Now, please, consider my situation, please be patient with me," Ravel wrote to his friend in St. Jean-de-Luz. "In the midst of my pregnancy with the concerto (I am at the stage of throwing up) I am suddenly called to Marrakesh. You must have seen the billboards designed by Pugita announcing 'Le grand festival de Maurice Ravel.' Two hundred francs for a ticket! It's lucky that I can get in 'on the house.'"

Ravel later told the music critic, Chausson, that the piece "is a concerto in the strict sense, written in the spirit of Mozart and Saint-Saëns. I believe that a concerto can be both gay and brilliant without necessarily being profound or aiming at dramatic effect. It has been said that the concerto of some great classical composers, far from being for the piano, have been written against it. And I think that this criticism is quite justified.

"At the beginning I meant to call my work a divertissement, but afterward considered that this was unnecessary, as the name Concerto adequately describes the kind of music it contains. In some ways my Concerto is not unlike my Violin Sonata; it uses certain effects borrowed from jazz, but only in moderation."

Finally, because of his heavy schedule, and the onset of his illness, Ravel had to admit that he would not be able to play the Concerto himself. "Would you like to have my Concerto, which will end with trills and in fortissimo?" he asked his friend, Marguerite Long. Later, he brought her the Concerto in G which ends with a passage in broken chords and in fortissimo.

Choreography by Jerome Robbins
During the First World War, while Maurice Ravel was in the French Army, Jacques Roucè, director of the Paris Opéra discussed with Madame Colette Willy the possibility of writing the book for a musical stage work. Colette, la grande romancière des lettres was enchanted with the notion and proceed to invent a divertissement féerique suited to Ravel's talent. She dispatched it to the front, but it never reached him, and it was only in 1919 that he finally saw her libretto. He was delighted with her ideas for they embodied many of the elements of fantasy and satire that had characterized his earlier Ma Mère l'Oye (Mother Goose Suite).

The first title suggested for the work was Ballet pour Ma Fille. "Why," he asked, "should I write a ballet for my daughter when I have no daughter?" So the name finally agreed upon was L'Enfant et les Sortileges, literally, The Boy and the Sorceries, which has sometimes been rendered as Dreams of a Naughty Boy. Although Ravel agreed to compose the music sometime in 1920, the effects of the war still depressed him, and it was not until 1924 that he began to work on the ballet-opera in earnest. He wrote a friend:

"I stick to my grind, see no one, go out just enough to keep from cracking up; if L'Enfant isn't done on time, it won't be my fault..."

It was first produced at the Théâtre de Monte Carlo, March 21, 1925 with George Balanchine as choreographer. When presented at the Opéra Comique in Paris the following season, its reception was typical of the avant-garde works of the period, being at once cool and in some quarters, enthusiastic. Honegger amongst other composers recognized it as a work of great distinction and liked particularly the duet of the Black and White Cats of which he wrote:

"The Duet of the Cats is the most extraordinary part of the score. Ravel does not imitate the Cats miaowing, but rather he uses it as the inspiration for his melodic line. The whole problem of so-called "imitative music" is here contained."

Ravel, who was fond of George Gershwin, wrote that "L'Enfant et les Sortilèges" was composed in the spirit of an American operetta (musical-comedy). In it, Ravel returned to his earlier world of fantasy, but now with more authority allowing the tenderness and sophistication of his essential nature to be heard on a grand scale. It was almost for the last time.
