Mrs. Ford will attend a reception to highlight the opening of an exhibit of women's history Thursday, July 10 at about 8 p.m. The reception is being held at the National Archives.

The exhibit is called "Her Infinite Variety: a 200-year Record of America's Women." It emphasizes the changing role of women over two centuries in the United States, employing a variety of documents and photographs.

Hosts for the reception are Arthur F. Sampson, Administrator of the General Services Administration, and James B. Rhoads, archivist of the United States. Mrs. Ford will be met at the Constitution Avenue Entrance of the National Archives by Mr. Sampson, Mr. Rhoads, Mrs. Jill Ruckelshaus, presiding officer for the National Commission on the Observance of International Womens Year; and Dr. Ruth Bacon, director of the US Center for International Womens Year.

The exhibit celebrates both the Bicentennial and International Womens Year. There are nine sections of the display: women in marriage; as landowners; at work; fighting for rights; in reform movements; as bureaucrats; on Capitol Hill; in diplomacy; and in wartime.

Roles of America's Women
Over the First 200 Years

"Her Infinite Variety: a 200-Year Record of America's Women," an exhibit ranging over the roles of women from the days when Deborah Sampson Gannett shouldered a musket in the Revolution up until the present day when 19 women serve in the Congress, has opened at the National Archives.

To celebrate both the Bicentennial and International Women's Year, documents and photographs from two centuries of the nation's records were selected for the exhibit in the Circular Gallery of the National Archives.

An invitational reception at which the hosts will be Administrator of General Services Arthur F. Sampson and Archivist of the United States James B. Rhoads -- who heads GSA's National Archives and Records Service -- has been scheduled for July 10. Among the invited guests are women members of Congress and other notable women from many walks of life.

Except for the night of July 10, the exhibit is open to the public from 9 a.m. until 10 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 1 p.m. through 10 p.m. on Sunday. It will remain in place until next spring.

There are nine sections of the exhibit: women in marriage; as landowners; at work; fighting for rights; in reform movements; as bureaucrats; on Capitol Hill; in diplomacy; and in wartime.

Deborah Sampson -- maiden name of the Revolutionary War enlisted volunteer from Massachusetts who fought in male clothing using the name "Robert Shurtleff" -- suffered both sword and bullet wounds as a Continental Army soldier.

However, she avoided hospital treatment--and disclosure--until she succumbed to fever after the battle of Yorktown. Following a descreetly arranged discharge, she married farmer Bennett Gannett and became the mother of three children. Her husband was the first American to be granted a pension as the widower of a soldier.

On display in the exhibit is her sworn declaration to the federal government of her military service.

U.S. General Services Administration, Washington DC, 20405 202-343-4511

In the "marriage" section of the exhibit there is a letter from Lucy Audubon seeking federal employment for her artist-naturalist husband, John James Audubon; a pamphlet by a Utah woman upholding the practice of plural marriage; an application for divorce from a woman who wished to be rid of her unfaithful, profligate husband--a move rejected by the Congress as contrary to public morals; a hand-painted German "fraktur" marriage certificate; and a document legalizing the marriage of former slaves.

In the other sections there are California land claims and Western "homestead proofs" filed by women, a plea from Moqui Indian villages in Arizona that their matriarchal system be left undisturbed, displays showing women "taking in sewing" as a home industry, practicing law, serving as medical doctors, striking in the garment industry against exploitation, agitating for the vote, serving in Congress and in diplomatic posts.

There are records concerning Harriet Tubman, organizer of the Underground Railroad which sped slaves to freedom, the jailing of beautiful Confederate spy Belle Boyd, Amelia Earhart taking off on the Pacific flight from which she did not return, Union General Ben Butler's Order 28 in the Civil War which told his men to treat Confederate sympathizers in New Orleans as "women of the town," a military license for a prostitute during the Civil War to practice her "avocation," papers of an OSS (Office of Strategic Services) female agent in occupied France during World War II, and former Chief of Naval Operations Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr. bussing the Navy's first woman admiral.

The story of Dr. Mary Walker is documented. A contract surgeon in the Union Army during the Civil War, she received the Medal of Honor in 1865--but 50 years later was denied the benefits of her award by the War Department through a reinterpretation of her qualifications.

Adding touches of color to the exhibit are World War I and II patriotic and recruitment posters featuring women.

PEOPLE/SCENE

American Women: 'Good Start'

By Dorothy McCardle

First Lady Betty Ford walked slowly and carefully through the exhibition of the record of what American women have achieved in the first 100 years of the nation's history last night.

She stopped to read the fine print and there and to laugh a little at one of the old-fashioned pictures. Then she straightened up and gave her opinion of "Her Infinite Variety: 200-Year Record of America's Women" at the invitational reception opening the exhibit at the National Archives. "I think it is fantastic what men have done," she said. "They've made a very good start."

But when she left, she pronounced herself ready for the next step for women. Down at her limousine parked at the Constitution Avenue and D Street NW entrance to the Archives, she turned to Arthur F. Sampson, administrator of the General Services Administration, which oversees the Archives, with one last word. "If we are to continue to move ahead, we have one more step right now," she told Sampson, who had escorted her, together with others, through the exhibit.

"I hope we have the Equal Rights Amendment by 1976. There would be no better way to celebrate the nation's Bicentennial anniversary than with the passage of ERA."

Sampson was ready for the challenge. "If we do, we sign it right here," he said, glancing up at the tall columns of the Archives, where the originals of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution are now under protective glass.

"Nothing could be better," said Mrs. Ford, who then got into the car and was driven away.

Dressed in a long pink-and-green-print evening gown, the First Lady stayed at the Archives for about 40 minutes.

Her welcoming committee included Sampson, James B. Rhoads, Archivist of the United States; Jill Ruckelshaus, presiding officer for the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year, and Dr. Ruth Bacon, director of the U.S. Center for International Women's Year.

Mrs. Ford first passed the cases enclosing the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, followed by a modern reminder of women's progress in the person of a woman violinist playing with a Marine Band combo in the lobby, where food and drinks were being served.

On her way to the women's exhibit, she was surrounded by women, children—and men—at every step, all eager to shake her hand. Near the end, Mayor and Mrs. Walter Washington arrived. The mayor had come from the White House, where the President was having a conference with a group of the nation's mayors.

"This has been quite a change of pace from there to here," said the mayor.

She took home a trophy of her visit in the form of a replica of the joint resolution by Congress in 1919 which proposed a constitutional amendment to give women the right to vote. It was presented to her for "her dedication to the cause of women's rights."

Betty Ford, second from left, with Jill Ruckelshaus, James Rhoads and Arthur F. Sampson as she is presented a replica of the 1919 resolution that proposed to give women the right to vote.

I have told them Mrs. Ford will not participate in the receiving line but will drop by the Reception to see the exhibit and mingle after it is underway.

I do not foresee her participation as being beyond
20 or 30 minutes. The file is attached. Thank you.
