THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary to Mrs. Ford

The President and Mrs. Ford will host a special Bicentennial celebration at the White House Tuesday, July 20. Guests will be members of the Diplomatic Corps, Ambassadors to the Organization of American States and Territories, the Congressional leadership, Cabinet and Governors of the States and Territories.

The celebration will be a white tie concert and reception. It is the major White House social event in honor of the Bicentennial.

The concert will be in the Rose Garden and will highlight American musical creativity, with selections ranging from show tunes to country western.

Among artists performing will be Ella Fitzgerald, who will perform show tunes by such American composers as Cole Porter, George Gershwin and Jerome Kern. Tammy Wynette will perform country and western selections. The World's Greatest Jazz Band will play various forms of American jazz.

Following the concert, the Marine Corps Dance Orchestra will entertain for dancing on the State Floor.

THE WHITE HOUSE

In the major White House celebration of the Bicentennial, the President and Mrs. Ford will host a concert and reception Tuesday, July 20 at 9 p.m. (see previous release).

The concert will spotlight the versatility and creativity of American music. Artists, who are Roger Miller, Ella Fitzgerald, Tammy Wynette and the World's Greatest Jazz Band, will perform in the Rose Garden beneath a white canopy.

Background on the performers:

Roger Miller, contemporary singer/song-writer, will perform two of his compositions--"King of the Road" and "Lady America." Miller is distinguished as the entertainer who has won more grammy awards (11 in the period between 1964-1965) than any other singer. He has composed most of the music he performs. Miller entertained at the White House during the Johnson Administration.

Ella Fitzgerald will sing tunes by such American composers as Cole Porter, George Gershwin and Jerome Kern. She is known for her renditions of a variety of music, which includes ballads, Dixieland, calypso, pop and jazz. Miss Fitzgerald is the recipient of many awards including the "Golden Needle" (from the East Berlin Government) and four Grammys. She recently received an Honorary Doctorate from Dartmouth College. This will be her first performance at the White House.

Tammy Wynette, a country-western singer, is a four-time winner of the Country Music Association of America's Female Vocalist of the Year and also a three-time Grammy winner for Best Female Vocalist. Miss Wynette has written and co-written several of her own recordings, including "Stand By Your Man." She has appeared before audiences throughout the United States and Canada. This will be her first performance at the White House.

The World's Greatest Jazz Band will perform "South Rampart Street Parade," "Lime House Blues," and "When the Saints Go Marching In" among their selections. Since their formation in 1968, the group has toured North and South America and Europe. They received the International Critics Award in England (1973). The band appeared at the 1969 and 1973 Inaugural Ball and at the White House March, 1970.

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary to Mrs. Ford

The President and Mrs. Ford will host a special Bicentennial celebration at the White House Tuesday, July 20. Guests will be members of the Diplomatic Corps, Ambassadors to the Organization of American States and Territories, the Congressional leadership and members of the Cabinet.

The celebration will be a white tie concert and reception. It is the major White House social event in honor of the Bicentennial.

The concert will be in the Rose Garden and will highlight American musical creativity, with selections ranging from show tunes to country western.

Among artists performing will be Ella Fitzgerald, who will perform show tunes by such American composers as Cole Porter, George Gershwin and Jerome Kern. Tammy Wynette will perform country and western selections. The World's Greatest Jazz Band will play various forms of American jazz.

Following the concert, the Marine Corps Dance Orchestra will entertain for dancing on the State Floor.

Biography of

ROGER MILLER

That the man never sleeps is one of the first things you hear about Roger Miller, a legendary insomniac whose open-eyed marathons are as famous as his unending string of American songs.

A while back, an admiring amateur keeper of late hours asked Miller's drummer how long the champ could stay awake? "Well," replied the musician, "I'm not sure, I've only been with Roger a year and a half -- I don't know how long he was awake before that."

The no-sleep syndrome has evolved into a lifestyle that regards sunshine as something that happens to other people. Contrary to the rest of the world, Miller is a nightbird who has been known to schedule everything from recording sessions to business meetings after the sun goes down. The extra hours keep him one jump ahead of the game. He writes songs -- effortlessly -- in cars, dressing rooms, airplanes, offices, hotel rooms, at all hours. At times unfinished songs, fragmented ideas and melody lines are left about untended on envelopes, checks, napkins and even gum wrappers. One long time friend insists that several great Miller masterpieces have been lost forever on thrown out spearmint wrappers.

Once, strictly a country singer, Miller's work has transcended musical boundaries with an agility previously unequalled in Opry circles. Authorities as diverse as Johnny Mercer and Charles Mingus have heralded Miller as a bona fide genius, with the jazzman adding, "nobody can write better songs. He's said it all."

That's not idle praise.

Miller, lean and laconic, banters around wordplay with astonishing ease ("the last word in lonesome is me") while manipulating traditional country stylization ("I've been a long time leavin'/but I'll be a long time gone.") Miller, with typical understatement says of his creative spurts, "I write a line at a time, really. A line comes to me and I sit down and sing it and then I write the next line and then I have two lines and I sing them. Then I do a third line and sing all three; then come up with the fourth. It's a line at a time, it's go back and come to it, it's like hitting a brick wall and each time you hit it, it gives a little. You find you've gotten the wall to give enough until you've written a whole song."

Making the brick wall give originates in an erratic Oklahoma childhood. "My father died when I was a year old," remembers Miller, "there were three little boys, I was the youngest and my mother couldn't support us so she was going to put us in an orphanage. My father had three brothers and one lived in Arkansas, one in Oklahoma and one in California. Each came and took a boy home and raised him. I went to Oklahoma."

While growing up, Miller worked his uncle's farm, joined the Future Farmers of America, went to a one room school and dreamed of country and western glory. One of his friends during that time remembers Miller's uncle saying "when the boy grows up he wants to be just like Sheb." Sheb was, of course, Sheb Wooley, the country singer and an in-law of the Miller clan.

But the future lure of the spotlight hardly compensated for the present reality of the farm. "I hated it all," Miller laughs. "But I hated most of all on Saturdays cleaning out the chicken house. A lot of people who grew up on a farm will know why!

"I said, Lord give me a guitar and let me get out of here and make something of the world." Laughing he adds, "so I've worked hard for 20 years in this business trying to get enough money to buy a little land and settle down in the country. The circles go around and around."

While in school, Miller picked cotton on Saturdays to earn the money to buy a second hand guitar. He mastered a few chords and figured it was just a matter of time before stardom came dropping down like manna from Heaven. For the next three years he drifted from Oklahoma to Texas working at odd jobs, while waiting for the Big Break. It came in the form of an invitation from Uncle Sam to join the band in Korea. It proved to be something of a blessing.

"When I got into the army, I finally met some guys who really knew something about the guitar and they taught me and I learned what I could.

"When I was stationed in South Carolina I met this sargeant who said he had a brother in the business, Jethro of Homer and Jethro. This sargeant could play the bass as well as Jethro could play the mandolin and we used to sit in the barracks and play. He was the one who really convinced me to go to Nashville after I got out of the army. I was probably going back to Oklahoma and work in a gas station."

The sargeant arranged an RCA audition for the now discharged veteran, but the session turned out rather dismal. "I just walked in and said to Chet Atkins, 'I want to audition, I'm a songwriter' and he said 'well, where's your guitar'? I said 'I don't have one and he said 'you can use mine'. So there's Chet Atkins and I'm using his guitar and I sang in one key and played in another. It was a disaster."

In Nashville, broke and married, without any concrete offers to join the ranks of the stars, he scrambled to stay alive. Working as a bellhop at the Andrew Jackson Hotel, playing fiddle with Minnie Pearl and drumming with Faron Young gave Miller the monetary base needed to keep going. A few of his songs did relatively well -- for other people. "Invitation to the Blues" was recorded by Ray Price and Patti Page; "Half A Mind" by Ernest Tubbs and "Billy Bayou" by Jim Reeves.

"I had come to Nashville to be a singer, but I was unorthodox I guess. I'd sing songs for people and they'd say that would be good for someone else. I'd say what about me and they'd say, we'll get to you later...and it was quite a bit later they got to me."

Five years to be exact; or 1964 when Miller made music history by winning the first batch of what would be 11 Grammys over a two year period; an all-time record.

"Chug A Lug," "Dang Me," "Engine, Engine #9," "In the Summer-time" and of course, "King of the Road" all written and released within months of each other, each reaching the number one spot and each selling over a million copies. It's estimated that "King of the Road" has been recorded about 300 times. Miller's recording alone sold 2½ million copies and he candidly says of it's success, "It kept me off the streets."

It also kept him at the forefront of a music industry that was about to go legitimate, to take itself out of the small town halls into the plush nightclubs of Las Vegas, about to go from being a regional favorite to a national pastime, about to go from being the poor relation of music to the number one son.

"Country music is good music, saleable, not on a narrow scale. I always wanted to take it to town.

"Back in 1966, I was on the cover of the Post and I remember the words under the picture said 'big boom in country music.' So there's a big boom in country music about every five years. I think this time it's going to stay pretty heavy."

Miller was one of the first country artists to make the leap to national television and Las Vegas. With an easy wit that has been likened by reporters to a Will Rogers, Miller's droll manner betrays a quick mind and a clever tongue. It's a persona that's left very few doors unopened.

"I like it all," he says, "singing, writing, all of it. I like to do all I can. I like to go on stage and fool around. I'd like to go on stage driving a tractor. You know how to tell a funeral in a small town? The front tractor has it's lights on."

For a country-boy he has done rather well for himself. Eleven Grammys, dozens of million-selling singles, a voice as distinctive as they come, a solid following with audiences from Las Vegas to the Grande Old Opry, and the current leisure to step back and take a rest.

Joking he says, "I'd like to get up one morning, or afternoon and not have to be anywhere, not be writing or recording or running off to a date."

His latest Columbia album "Roger Miller Supersongs," with a single "I Love A Rodeo," both of which were produced, written, sung and published by Miller, is a superb blending of music that can't be catalogued in any particular genre...except perhaps that it's Roger at his very best.

When he's not on the road, Miller lives in the Hollywood Hills in a home originally built by John Barrymore as an aviary, which still boasts the interior design of former tenant Candace Bergen. With some awe, Miller says Katherine Hepburn once rented the house and "can you imagine the people who sat in this living room?" They're in good company.
