Possibilities for the Ruckelshaus Women's Year

By Isabelle Shelton
Washington Star Staff Writer

Women are excited about the possibilities they see in the International Commission on Women's Year named the other day by the White House, although they are distressed that it was named so late.

The year will be more than one-fourth gone before the new commission — which will be headed by former White House director of women's affairs Jill Ruckelshaus — holds its first meeting on April 15. Until now, the United Nations-spawned I.W.Y. has been largely without focus in this country.

The new commission is supposed to wind up its work by the end of December, when I.W.Y. ends, and give a final report to President Ford by the end of January, 1976. Some people are hoping for an extension, since the Commission is getting under way so late.

IN ANY CASE, those who seek the advancement of women in this country see the commission as potentially the most important thing that has happened for women since Lyndon Johnson, then vice president, and Esther Peterson, then assistant secretary of Labor, talked President John Kennedy into creating a Commission on the Status of Women, and persuaded the late Eleanor Roosevelt to head it.

Many serious students of the burgeoning women's movement in this country trace the explosion of activity back to that commission. It caused a turnaround on the Equal Rights Amendment, which Congress had treated as a joke for 50 years. And through state commissions on the Status of Women it spawned across the land it got thousands of women thinking seriously about their role in life, and the many inequities that needed changing.

Mrs. Ruckelshaus thinks her commission — which presently has 37 members, with one or two more nominees expected soon from the White House — should break down into task forces on various subjects, as did the commission headed by Mrs. Roosevelt.

She does not want to discuss the areas the commission will explore, preferring to wait for input from other commission members but women's groups are not waiting for that. A large group of them, extending from the Girl Scouts to some for the liberal organizations, will present the commission staff with a proposed agenda some day this week.

OBVIOUS AREAS for the commission to consider include:

- Final passage of the Equal Rights Amendment which still needs to be ratified by four more states. Despite First Lady Betty Ford's valiant efforts, support from the White House has not been strong. It was almost non-existent during the Nixon years, except for Mrs. Ruckelshaus. She got in some good licks but the clout of a committed president would have meant more.
- Enforcement of anti-discrimination laws now on the books. Many of the problems women still face especially in equal job opportunity, have been addressed by Congress.
- But enforcement is a joke, with the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission suffering a two-year backlog for instance. There has been almost no crackdown on firms holding federal contracts who discriminate, despite a law banning such discrimination.
- And anti-discrimination in education — the so-called "Title Nine" Amendment passed in 1972 — is still awaiting guidelines before its implementation. Now a "backlash" from white male teachers (who feel threatened by both women and blacks), plus pressure from some who seek the advancement of women in this country...
Ford Picks Women's Year Panel

Washington Post Staff Writer

The White House yesterday finally announced its nominees for the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year.

Jill Ruckelshaus, director of organizational relations for the National Center for Voluntary Action and former director of women's affairs in the Nixon White House, was named to head the new commission.

The Year 1975 was proclaimed International Women's Year by the United Nations in December, 1974. President Ford announced the proclamation for the United States in January, 1974, and President Ford announced the creation of the National Commission on January 9 of this year.

But the year will be three-and-a-half months gone by the time the new commission holds its first meeting, April 18.

The purpose of the celebration of the year, as set forth by the United Nations, is to "promote equality between men and women," "ensure the full integration of women in the total economic and social development of their countries," and "recognize the importance of women's increasing contribution to the development of friendly relations and cooperation among states and to the strengthening of world peace."

In addition to the 23 members named yesterday by President Ford, Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield has named Sens. Charles Percy, R-Ill., and Birch Bayh, D-Ind., to the commission. House Speaker Carl Albert has named Reps. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., and Margaret Atwater, R-Mass.

Of President Ford's 33 nominees, 29 are women and 4 are men.

The Women include the nation's only woman governor, Democrat Ella Grasso of Connecticut; former Rep. Martha Griffiths, D-Mich.; former White House Counselor Anne Armstrong; author-playwright Clare Boothe Luce; television's Barbara Walters; and Pat Hutar, former vice-chairman of the Republican National Committee and presently U. S. representative to the U. N.

Other women named are City Councilwoman Ethel Allen of Philadelphia; Margaret Long Arnold of the National Retired Teachers Association; Attorney Elizabeth Athanasakos; University of Maryland economics professor Barbara Bergman; Patricia Carbine, editor-chief of Ms. Magazine, and Judge Mary Stallings Coleman of the Michigan Supreme Court.

Others are Helen Copley, chairman and chief executive officer of the Copley Newspapers; Audrey Colem, coordinator of the D. C. Child Advocacy Office; Gilda Gjurich, president and senior partner in a California construction firm; Hanna Gray, provost of Yale University; Lenore Hervey, editor-chief of the Ladies Home Journal, and Velma Hill, assistant to the president of the United Federation of Teachers.

Others are Rita Johnston of Bethesda, vice-chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women of the Organization of American States; Dorothy Kissinger, co-owner of an Arizona guest ranch; New York Civil Service Commissioner Ersa Roosevelt; Betty Smith, a member of the national board of the YMCA; Annie Waunek, a member of the Navajo Indian Tribal Council; Gerridee Wheeler, president of the National Association of Mental Health, and Sister Joel Read, president of Alverno College of Milwaukee.

Three of the women are quite young. Paula Gibson, a freshman at Gonzaga University in Spokane, Wash., a leader in Future Homemakers of America, is 18. Casey Eike, assistant to the dean of women at the University of Kansas, is St. Ellen Kirby, a Phiple Health Service nurse in Grant County, W. Va., is 27.

The four men named to the commission are Weston Christopherson, president of Jewel Companies, a Midwest food chain; Richard C. Todes, author and former executive vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers; former Governor Winfield Dunn of Tennessee and William Mercer, president of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Dear Dr. Westerhof:

Sheila Weidenfeld sent along to me your letter concerning the Commission for International Women's Year and your vita.

The Commission was named by the President in early April and is now in place. However, I will send your resume over to the staff of the Commission as there may be a possibility of using your excellent contributions as a consultant. If this kind of possibility does occur, you will be hearing directly from them.

Sincerely,

Patricia S. Lindh
Special Assistant to the President for Women

The National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year began work only last Tuesday -- 3 1/2 months after the start of International Women's Year -- because President Ford didn't get around to appointing the members until April 2.

Maybe it's a classic example of the handicaps that subtly discriminate against women. The Commission is at the very bottom of the totem pole here in status-conscious Washington. The Commission has no money to speak of, and will be lucky if Congress squeezes out $700,000 to run it for the months left of the official year. Things definitely are tight.

And the powers-that-be around here have generally overlooked the Commission. The State Department, under whose jurisdiction the Commission falls, waited until practically the first meeting before telling anyone about it, so the press was predictably light. President Ford invited the Commission to a special reception -- on the day the Press Office decided to initiate a ban against press coverage of "private" social functions at the White House. Result? No coverage. (4/22/75)
The President today announced his intention to appoint two persons as members of the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year, 1975. These individuals along with the thirty-three others announced April 2, 1975, complete the thirty-five member commission. They are:

Katharine Hepburn, of Old Saybrook, Connecticut, Actress.

Alan Alda, of Leonia, New Jersey, Actor and Writer.

The Commission consists of not more than thirty-five members appointed by the President from among citizens in private life. The President designates the presiding officer, who may designate from among the members of the Commission as many vice presiding officers as necessary.

The Commission is to conclude its work by the end of the year 1975 and make a report to the President within thirty days thereafter. The Commission is to then be terminated.
