We Hope Susan Slept Well

Washington (UPI) -- President Ford's daughter, Susan, takes her scholastic aptitude test tomorrow and got a bit of advice from her brothers: "Get a good night's sleep." Susan, 17, a senior at the Holton Arms School in Bethesda, Md., a private girls school had wanted to prepare for the examinations, according to Sheila Weidenfeld, the First Lady's Press Secretary. But Mrs. Weidenfeld said that Susan's three brothers, who have already been that route, told her, "There's absolutely no way to study for those exams. Get a good night's sleep." The examinations will test Susan for admission to college and stress her aptitude in English and Mathematics. The highest score is 800.

But Susan already has applied for admission to Mt. Vernon College, located in a fashionable section of Washington, D.C., and probably would continue to live at the White House when she attends the two-year junior college.

Susan is considering a career in child care or fashion. She also is particularly interested in the education of the mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed children.

Ford Scholar

Susan Ford, the President's 17-year-old daughter, takes the scholastic aptitude Test today, along with thousands of other teen-agers trying to qualify for college. Her three older brothers advised her that there is no way to study for the exam, the White House said yesterday — "Just get a good night's sleep." Miss Ford, a senior at Holton Arms, a private school in Bethesda, is planning to attend Mt. Vernon College in the District, according to White House sources.
