Mickey Rooney and Gene Hackman as convicts

Remember Betty Ford's TV comments on her teen-age daughter and premarital sex? Asked last year how she would feel if Susan Ford confided that she was having an affair, the First Lady replied: "Well, I wouldn't be surprised. I think she's a perfectly normal human being like all young girls." OK, but what does Susan have to say on the subject? Answering a question during a vacation news conference last week on Seabrook Island, S.C., the President's 18-year-old daughter smiled and said she knew perfectly well that women are on the whole equal, but there are quite a lot of things that women don't particularly want to do or can't do, which men can, because we happen to be constructed differently in a physical sense.

Chow time at San Quentin presented the usual tableau of denim-clad prisoners sitting on wooden benches at long tables to wolf down their lunch. But it was terrific food—catered from the outside as a gesture by the producers of "The Domino Principle," a movie starring Gene Hackman and Mickey Rooney as San Quentin convicts and employing real inmates as extras. "We've done straight: "I have no intention of having an affair as of yet." One male reporter pressed on to ask Susan if she would consider having an affair with her friend David Kennerly, the White House photographer. "No, no," she said, shaking her head. "Not at all."

"Mamma mia, it's so terrible to talk English so much," groaned Italian movie actress Mariangela Melato, 33, grappling with language American-style in an interview in New York. The rich-bitch heroine of Lina Wertmüller's "Swept Away" is in the U.S. to promote a new picture in which she plays a different breed of woman: a fiery Communist modeled on "La Pasionaria" of Spanish Civil fame. "Guemica," as the film is called, takes its name from the defense Basque town bombed by He- Luftwaffe in 1937 and immortalized by Picasso painting that Mariangela was swept away to New York, saw last week at Manhattan's Museum of Modern Art. "Making the film," she said, "was like living Picasso's painting."

Various Developments in Florida

Actress-singer Kathryn Grayson has been charged with slugging the grandmother of a missing teen-ager in the hotel room of nightclub psychic Peter Hurkos in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Really, Grayson has flown to California, released on $125 bond. The grandmother, Cecilia Holcomb, 65, said her daughter, Mrs. Jocelia Fittin, went to Hurkos and asked the psychic to find her daughter, Teresa. Hurkos said it would cost $5,000, then $2,500, and said he needed to examine the girl's clothing. Hurkos, after some thought, said the girl was in California or Denver. Mrs. Fittin grew skeptical. Grandmother went to Hurkos' hotel room to get the clothing. A reporter was with her. When she entered the room, she said, Grayson, appearing on the same bill with Hurkos at the hotel, ran across the room and hit her. Mrs. Hurkos was there too. She says the reporter hit Grayson and kicked her (Mrs. Hurkos) and hit the grandmother. Hurkos, meanwhile, was muttering, "She is alive. She is alive. I will find her." This was in reference to Teresa Fittin, whom you may have forgotten. Eventually, we may know what happened. Time is on our side.

The gossip columnists apparently will have to wait because Susan Ford says she has no intention yet of having an affair. The President's daughter said during a news conference in Seattle, Wash., that she watched as her mother told millions of TV viewers that she would not be surprised to learn her daughter was having an affair. Susan said she "saw nothing wrong with the comments." She and her mother, she says, have "very, very similar ideas."
TOPEKA, Kan. — Susan Ford said yesterday she has no affairs to tell her mother about, nor does she have anything to say about her romance with Brian McCartney, a young ski instructor.

"Not yet. I'll leave it at that," Miss Ford said in an interview.

She said she plans to see McCartney, 26, when she joins her family in Vail, Colo., next week. She said McCartney visited her three times in Topeka this summer.

"I'M GOING TO go play, before school," said Miss Ford, who is finishing an internship as photographer with the Topeka Capital-Journal. She will be a freshman at Mt. Vernon College in Washington.

Susan's mother, First Lady Betty Ford, said in a television interview over the weekend she would not be surprised if her 18-year-old daughter disclosed she was having an affair.

"I like the idea she's open enough she might accept it, if it happened," Susan said. "She said it would all depend upon the situation. I agree with that."

Susan said she also thinks the President would support their stand.

"He's very protective of me, but he's willing to listen, and if I feel strongly enough about it, he agrees," she said. "But if I turn out to be wrong, I'll sure hear about it."

MISS FORD, interviewed yesterday, said she was pleased her mother answered the touchy questions posed by the interviewer. And she said she's even more pleased with the First Lady's responses.

"They were questions that were never answered, or asked, before," said Miss Ford. "They've got to be answered. Like abortion. It should be brought out of the woods."

In the interview with Morley Safer on CBS' "60 Minutes" program, Mrs. Ford commented on such things as abortion, premarital sex and young people experimenting with marijuana.

"I think she did a good job," said Susan, who watched the program Sunday night at the Kansas govern-nor's mansion during a party Gov. and Mrs. Robert F. Bennett gave for her.

SHE SAID SHE shares her mother's views on premarital sex, and went a step further: "I agree people should live with each other ... before marriage, I mean."

Susan said her mother was apprehensive about her watching the program. She said she called her mother last week and interrupted the taping of the TV show at the White House.

"Mother was really funny about it," Susan said. "She said, 'Susan, I'm not too sure I want you to see this thing. Your mother may come across as a liberated woman.'"

"I told her, 'Mother, I don't care what you said. I care about what your views are, and so do others. If the question comes up, you've got to answer it.'"

SUSAN SAID she hopes her mother's comments are indicative she's throwing off her baby-girl-of-the-family image.

"It was nice to hear her call me a big girl," she said. "I've always been called their 'little girl,' hoping I'm not going to grow up because all the (three Ford) boys are gone and they don't want me to leave."

"But I understand. I'm the only girl. You've got to hold onto those babies."

She said the Fords' female golden retriever, Liberty, may be pregnant.

"Maybe she'll have babies and they can have some other babies to worry about besides me," she said.
Personalities

Oh, we've got some dandy items today. Right off the bat we have a British operatic tenor who was put out of action when someone threw a ... at him.

Charles Craig suffered broken ribs in a London rehearsal for Puccini's "La Fanciulla," where a jealous husband is supposed to fling his infatuated wife upon his rival's dead body. American soprano Nancy Shade (130 pounds) limited it wasn't "her fault."

Nina B. Hyde decided yesterday to remain as fashion editor of the Washington Post rather than take a previously announced-political May 3 with Bloomingdale's. The New York-based store, which plans to open two branches soon in the Washington area.

Remember Betty Ford's celebrated statement about not being surprised if her daughter was having no affairs. Well, Susan Ford last week dropped the other shoe.

She says she had no intention of having an affair.

The President's daughter, 18, spoke at a news conference in South Carolina where she was visiting relatives during Easter vacation from Mount Vernon College.

Not only that, the First Lady herself lost some votes this week because she got her citizens band radio license without waiting several weeks as most applicants do.

Actually, it was the Federal Communications Commission that was in the hot water, and FCC's James C. McKinney had to explain that temporary licenses can be obtained quickly in emergencies. Betty Ford's emergency was that she needed to talk with some of her doctors, in the Wisconsin primary campaign.
