PLYMOUTH—Months of preparations culminated here, Tuesday, with the opening of the national art exhibition, "Remember The Ladies," in Pilgrim Hall. The show, containing more than 200 individual items, portraits, books, manuscripts, letters and household objects, was assembled under the direction of Mrs. Mabel Brandon of Plymouth and Washington. The total budget for the unique presentation was approximately $550,000.

Local police, a private security firm and the Secret Service were all involved in the preparations for the arrival of First Lady Betty Ford, who officiated at the opening ceremonies. A twenty-four-hour-a-day patrol has been maintained at Pilgrim Hall since the arrival of the priceless art objects and museum pieces here last week. The security will be maintained for the duration of the show in Plymouth.

Anita Franks, executive secretary for the show told the OCM yesterday that the staff and the members of the Antiquarian Society were indebted to Acting Plymouth Police, Chief Ernest Leonardi, and Sgt. Louis Cappella for their cooperation and Director Mabel Brandon and Curator Conover Hunt walked through the displays. Mrs. Ford presented awards to PCHS students Wayne Carlin and Kim Freyermuth, winners of the essay contest staged for the opening. She spoke briefly to the crowd of about 750 assembled outside.

Angelo Brigida and notified personnel inside the club as well. The occupants of the boat agreed to leave before Brigida arrived on the scene.

Following Mrs. Ford's departure, the luncheon guests, who included other donors, sponsors and dignitaries toured the exhibit.

An evening reception was held to accommodate more than 700 additional friends, supporters and patrons of the exhibition. "Remember the Ladies" opened for the public yesterday and will remain in Plymouth until September.

Mrs. Ford Helps 'Remember the Ladies'

By JUDY KLEMESRUD
Special to The New York Times

PLYMOUTH, Mass., June 29—Three of Washington's most prominent political wives—Betty Ford, Nancy Kissinger and Joan Kennedy—gathered on the steps of Pilgrim Hall here today for the opening of a major Bicentennial exhibition about Revolutionary War era women, called "Remember the Ladies."

"We're here to honor the unsung women who helped to win our national revolution," Mrs. Ford said, shortly before cutting a white ribbon marking the opening of the exhibition, "and to focus attention on the unfinished business of our revolution for full freedom and justice for women."

Mrs. Ford, who was dressed in a white knit dress by Gloria-Sachs, drew mild boos from a small group of anti-ERA demonstrators in the crowd of about 1,000 persons gathered in front of the hall, when she said, "This exhibit about neglected Americans should give us strength and courage to seek equal rights for women today."

The hecklers carried signs reading "Stop ERA" and "Equal Rights Amendment Stamps Out the Family," and they occasionally chanted, "Go away, ERA." Advocates of the amendment countered by chanting "ERA, all the way."

Protesters Chant

The protesters broke into the chant again after Mrs. Ford finished reading a letter to President Ford from a 6½-year-old South Carolina girl, Alison Buckholtz, which said in part, "Why can't women be equal? Men are. Why can't women? Men say women can't be equal. That's not fair to girls and women. I'm going to write to the Governor so he can change the law."

The exhibition, housed on two floors of Pilgrim Hall and in the nearby Antiquarian House, consists of 213 objects dealing with American women—rich and poor, black, white and Indian—and their lives in the period between 1750 and 1815.

Why did the planners stop at 1815 rather than going up to the present?

"Because we wanted to show what revolutionary era women were like," said Linda Grant Depauw, the exhibition's historian. "It was a time when all women were working in the same occupations as men, and had equal pay and far more legal freedom and political rights than our own time. They were more liberated than at any time since."

This all changed when the Industrial Revolution came along," she said. "The affluence that occurred turned them into dependent women," she said.

The exhibition will be at Plymouth, the landing place of the Pilgrims, through Sept. 26, and then will move out to Atlanta, Washington, Chicago, Austin, Tex., and New York where it will end on June 15, 1977.

'A Dull Life'

It includes a number of portraits of the period's outstanding women, including Abigail Adams, Martha Washington, and Mercy Otis Warren. There are ball gowns and a maternity dress, as well as a 17th-century sex manual published in Philadelphia, a wig curler, an 18th-century Hanukkah lamp, Christina Gatlif's testimony of rape by British soldiers during the Revolutionary War and an exhibit of clothing worn by the war's camp followers.

Near Martha Washington's portrait is a portion of a letter she wrote while First Lady to a cousin in Virginia, which says, in part: "I live a very dull life here and know nothing that passes in the town—I never go to any public place—indeed I think I am more like a state prisoner than anything else..."

tight corsets of the period caused Mrs. Ford to laugh during her tour of the exhibition this afternoon.

"I'm just grateful I didn't have to live in that day," she said. "I would never be able to get ready."

At a nearby statue of Molly Pitcher, Mrs. Ford was told by Conover Hunt, the exhibi-sherbert in the Plymouth Yacht Club.

Boston students are crippled by incompetent and disorganized school administration, burdened with political pressure and red-tape, a spokesman for the state involved in Phase 2 said yesterday.

Robert J. Lamphere, vice president of Mutual Life Insurance Co., hasn't even scratched the surface of the problems students face for the world of work.

As chairman of the Tri-State Education, Inc., Lamphere has been critical of the state's firms and three consortia paired under Phase 2.

In an exclusive interview with the Boston Herald, Lamphere made these observations:

• The school system lacks a competent and top-level personnel. "It's not really happening." After a year of administration of Supt. Marion S. Murphy, the system finds itself without
