Dear Mr. President:

I wanted to write a brief note to you now that the incredibly busy days of the election campaign are past.

I wished to express a very sincere word of gratitude to you for the magnificent and courageous manner in which you have given yourself so tirelessly to the service of our nation at so difficult a time in its history. Our beloved country owes you a great debt of gratitude, Mr. President, and I have no doubt that, in the passage of time, your extraordinary role in healing the wounds of division and misunderstanding will be duly recognized.

Looking forward to the opportunity of seeing you in the months and years ahead and with kindest personal regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

John Joseph Cardinal Cooke
Archbishop of New York

The Honorable Gerald R. Ford,
The White House,
