The hypocrisy of Ford Cabinet extravagance

No wonder that Secretary of the Treasury William Simon wants permission to take a submachine gun home with him when he leaves the Cabinet and becomes just another millionaire.

He's been living so much like a king, at taxpayers' expense, that he fears the natives are restless.

Someone ought to assure Simon, though, that he won't really need a gatling gun, even if he has heaped slurs on poor people who need food stamps while he himself was raiding the Treasury through absurdly costly overseas junkets.

Ordinary Americans swallow a lot of hypocrisy from Cabinet officers without resorting to violence.

Yet, several callers did use the language of violence in talking to me about Simon's jaunt to London and Moscow in an Air Force jet. Simon hauled along his wife and two sons, other government officials and their wives and a score of Secret Service agents.

The callers had reason to be outraged, for no welfare cheat ever ripped off Uncle Sam with such consummate gall as did Simon with his cozy party of 43.

But perhaps publicity about Simon's simple sojourn will produce benefits for taxpayers. President-elect Carter just might see that scaling down his inaugural to less than ostentatious standards is not nearly as important as pulling his Cabinet members down to some sane level of consumption of the public's money.

Until Simon came along, our secretaries of the Treasury could have slept beside a candle in Lafayette Park without being recognized. They needed no batalion of bodyguards. But Simon, who bosses the Secret Service, saw nobodies getting Secret Service protection because they were "presidential candidates." The least he could do, to ensure that everybody knew he was a somebody, was to order massive Secret Service protection for himself — at his home, office and on his journeys, no matter where. Simon took more agents to Europe than Vice President Johnson had on his plane to Vietnam in 1961.

Simon's explanation is that somebody threatened him. I'll wager my next welfare check that what really prompted him to order himself massive protection was ego — and envy of the way Secretary of State Henry Kissinger basked in a guarded splendor that would have embarrassed half the world's monarchs.

A scant decade ago Secretary of State Dean Rusk was protected mostly by one chubby aide, who, some suspected, couldn't have found his pistol in a crisis. Mrs. Rusk was a familiar and admired sight, arriving alone at embassy parties — especially of Third World countries — never holding the notion that anyone wanted to harm her.

You go to lunch with Kissinger and see more gunmen hovering around the dining area than you saw when visiting the shah of Iran, or traveling in guerrilla-troubled Guerrero state with the president of Mexico.

Mrs. Kissinger go alone to an African embassy reception? Oh, no! She can't go to the grocery except in a government limousine with a Secret Service caravan.

The Secret Service and State Department refused to reveal how much was spent to protect the Rusks in 1968, as against protecting the Kissingers in 1976. But you can bet that the difference is absurd, and nothing has happened in the world to justify it.

Mr. Carter ought to note that while Simon plus 42 were crossing the Atlantic on an essentially personal junket in an Air Force jet, Commerce Secretary Elliot Richardson and his entourage of 14 crossed the Atlantic on cheaper commercial flights en route to legitimate governmental discussions in Eastern Europe.

I guarantee the President-elect that some of us will gladly give up our food stamps if the new Cabinet members will not try to live in the manner to which Simon and Kissinger became accustomed.
