

THINK - DELIBERATE - ACT

The Gerald R. Ford Presidential Library and the Kettering Foundation cordially invite you to the upcoming deliberative forum on the critical national public policy issue: national security. By attending this forum you will be joining others at twelve presidential libraries across the nation in deliberative discussions. We invite you to participate.

America's Role in the World:

What does national security mean in the 21st century?

Tuesday, April 20, 2010 5:30 pm to 7:30 pm

Light refreshments will be provided starting at 5:00 pm

THE ISSUE

This forum will discuss the following options for addressing our national security as presented in the booklet: America's Role in the World:

- National security means safeguarding the United States
- National security depends on putting our economic house in order
- National security means recognizing that global threats are our greatest challenge

No reservations are necessary.
However, if you do plan to participate,
please contact us by calling
(734) 205-0595 or by e-mail at fordlibrary.annarbor@nara.gov,
and an informational packet
will be sent to you.

This will be an intimate yet dynamic event. Feel free to bring along a student/colleague/friend!

THE PROCESS

The program is designed to elicit a broad range of ideas and viewpoints from everyone in the community. Your participation is sought because your thoughts and ideas matter! Your interest in the topic is sufficient to make a contribution.
